Editor's Note

Communication is one of the most powerful tools in any organization. It has the ability to build trust, strengthen relationships, resolve conflicts, and inspire positive action. This is why our Career Talk this month, "Never Write a Nasty Memo," serves as a timely reminder that every written communication reflects not only our professionalism but also our character. In this edition, we also bring you News in Pictures, capturing memorable moments from activities and events.

As always, we celebrate our colleagues marking their birthdays during these months. We appreciate your commitment and contributions and wish you continued success, good health, and happiness in the year ahead.

Thank you for being part of The Lifters. We hope you enjoy this edition and remain inspired to communicate with purpose, professionalism, and respect. Happy Reading!

Career Talk Today! Never Write a Nasty Memo

Never write a memo that criticizes, belittles, degrades, or is hurtful to a colleague. Never write a memo that is cynical, condescending, or unkind. Never send a memo written in anger or frustration.

The world of business is very small. People get promoted, change companies, change jobs, have powerful friends, and do all of this around the world and throughout your forty to fifty year career. Companies merge, acquire, and get acquired. Your self-made enemy could show up anywhere. Never give a company rival a smoking gun. Spend your energy on positive things.
